Introduction

Social studies theories, resources and strategies are tools to national self-reliance which is a comprehensive strategy for avoiding dependence and promoting development. It entails disengagement from the international system, restructuring of international and internal relations, and eventual re-association with the international economy. Self-reliant economic development relies on the human and material resources of the economic unit whose development is the subject of discussion. In other words, it is development that relies on “internal” resources as opposed to development that relies heavily on “external” resources.

Course Description

The knowledge of social studies theories, resources and strategies are very important to students in order to learn about the resources that are available that can benefit the society. Also, to show how social change alienation and personality is affecting the society.
